

PRESIDENT WILSON USE ALL HIS POWER TO PULL COX WHITE HOUSE

DEMOCRATIC OWNERSHIP IS PLEASING TO WILSON

Washington, July 19.—All of the political influence the Wilson administration can muster is being thrown behind Governor James M. Cox, of Ohio, Democratic nominee for President, and his campaign for the White House.

Just as soon as Cox follows his friends of acceptance, and is made August 1st, President Wilson and those prominent identified with his administration will begin to take active part in a concerted drive to pull up votes for the Democratic candidate.

It is to be the sequel of the understanding reached between the President and Cox, by which the Democratic candidate is to carry the League of Nations into every State in accordance with the President's views and wishes. It was explained, the statements issued by the two men after their Sunday conference at the White House to the effect that they had found themselves in complete accord did not surprise official Washington.

The knowledge that the White House will be in almost constant communication with the Governor prior to his visit to Washington—what the President and the way he appears to succeed him had found themselves in agreement before the President's official Washington for the statements.

Official Washington after his conference with President Wilson, and other administration leaders with definite assurance that he would receive the fullest support that all the far-reaching Federal machinery could offer him.

The man accused by the insurance inspectors of having sold stolen cars in Maine is now in police custody. An effort was made to secure a grand jury indictment in police court, but this was refused on the ground that the man had sold stolen cars belonging to Boston police as far as the evidence as presented disclosed.

The insurance underwriters declare that Boston is the only place where stolen cars are being sold. They claim that the man in question disposed of cars stolen in Brooklyn and other places within the last few months.

Alleged Sweetheart May Be One of Leading Witnesses

Manchester, Vt., July 19.—Byron Madison Pettibone, an undertaker's assistant, aged thirty-two, was on trial today in the Burlington County Superior Court for the alleged murder, by poison, of his wife, Mrs. Eva Madison Pettibone.

Maintaining his innocence and declaring that an alleged confession of guilt was drawn from him by brutal, third degree methods, the well-groomed and apparently cool young man appeared confident as the jury slowly drew.

The case has aroused wide interest in the State and has been the subject of the opening of the trial in the courtroom, crowded by the magnificence of the State's attorney, who was to be taxed to its utmost capacity by the modestly clothed defense.

A large panel of taxpayers had been summoned, and immediately following the calling of the roll, the reading of the indictment, the case was called on for the opening of the trial by the State's attorney, Frank C. Archibald.

FAILURE TO BETRAYS "AND" "BIG"

The fate of a stolen Chandler is described today in the concluding chapter of James E. Trask's exposure of the Boston branch of the auto theft syndicate. Trask turned State's evidence which indicted with Samuel C. Harris, wealthy horse dealer, and made a confession under oath.

Q—Do you remember a Chandler car? A—Yes sir. Somewhere about the middle of January, 1920, I saw one of the cars in the garage with a Chandler car. I didn't buy it the first time and he took it away. Later I got in touch with him after going to Boston and talking with Mr. Harris about it.

Q—What next happened? A—I bought the car.

Q—Did you previously tell Mr. Harris the reason you did not tell the first time was because it was too big for you to drive? A—Yes, that's right. We talked about the Chandler and he decided to get an Arnold's with me. He came to the yard to see the car.

—Anybody go with you? A—No.

Nation-Wide Strike in Prospect After Board's Finding, Say Brotherhood Chiefs

By Universal Service.

What increase will be. According to information granted today the award will grant an increase of 20 per cent. to the highest group of workers—engineers, conductors and firemen—and 25 per cent. to the lowest paid group—the shovelmens, trackmen and helpers. The brotherhoods had demanded an increase of 25 per cent. for the highest paid group and 40 per cent. for the lowest paid men.

Brotherhood officials who will pass upon the award include W. C. L. Fox, head of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen; J. J. McLaughlin, head of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; J. J. European Conditions Today
Show America Dangers of Entangling Alliances

The news of the day from Europe, like the news of almost every day from Europe, gives the American people some slight idea of the kind of mess into which President Wilson's League of Nations would plunge them if we were to accept it as it stands and as the Democratic platform has endorsed it.

France and England and Germany have apparently just escaped hostilities over the delivery of coal by Germany to France. Indeed, it is not certain that a new invasion of Germany will not occur, for the German representatives have yielded to the demands for coal only upon the stipulation that the allies shall do certain things which will enable Germany to supply the amount of coal demanded.

IN THE MEANTIME, WE WERE TOLD THAT IF AN ARMED INVASION OF GERMANY HAD BEEN DECIDED UPON, AMERICA WOULD HAVE BEEN EXPECTED TO LEND HER AID.

We have scanned the reports of the conference at Spa, where this new tempest was brewed, but we can find no evidence whatever of any participation by American representatives in this secret conclave, which is one of those conclaves that are so secret that they almost seem to be held for the special purpose of flouting President Wilson's "open covenants openly arrived at."

But we do not wish to suggest that America ought to be disappointed at the failure of America to be represented at the secret conclave in Spa. We have lost nothing, either in dignity or in material interest, by our absence from the secret intrigues of these child conclave called statesmen, who have spent nearly all their time since the armistice in shattering the ideals for which the anti-German world supposed it was fighting in the great World War.

Our dignity and self-respect are better preserved by our absence than by our presence at these conferences, nor would our material interests be better preserved by our participation while we are represented by the present administration at Washington.

The whole world knows how we were hoodwinked, flouted and humiliated and our interests dragged in the dust and our ideals repudiated at Paris and Versailles.

The world also knows what a ghastly joke was played upon the President by England when he was persuaded to ask Congress to permit us to undertake the mandate of Armenia under such terms as would require us to defend and police the mountains of Armenia, bare rocks, good for nothing except lairs for robbers and snares for the soldiers, and which would take fifty to one hundred thousand men to police, according to the report of our own military experts, and millions of American dollars; and all this expense in American blood and money was to be undertaken for the purpose of protecting Great Britain's stolen oil fields and the richest province of Armenia, which she grabbed.

The morning news also reveals to us how near we would be to another and more formal war with the Russian people if we were a member of the League of Nations. But that is another story, which will require an editorial to relate.

The combined news of the week shows that we have now raging about thirty wars, with the League of Nations to preserve peace in full operation and with a membership of twenty-nine nations. It is a wonderful league to preserve peace!

McAdoo Suggests Wise Way to Finance Campaigns

Former Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo has made a wise suggestion concerning the expense of our political campaigns for national objectives. He suggests that the National Government should pay the expenses of the national campaigns.

Mr. McAdoo is entirely right, and it is high time that the thing was done. The modern method of corrupting the government is by contributing to the campaign expenses of the candidates most likely to win.

To accept a campaign contribution from some one who pretends to have an unselfish interest in a candidate is much more self-respecting and easy than to accept a direct bribe.

Those who give great campaign contributions are non-partisan or bi-partisan. They contribute to both the old parties or to three parties, if a third party looks like a possible winner. Jay Gould, the great railroad magnate, once said that he was a Democrat in a Democratic county where his railroad operated, and a Republican in a Republican county. They give a little to the side they hope will lose and much to the side they hope will win.

But as neither side knows that anything has been given to the other, the contributor will seem very generous and very gratifying and very reciprocity-compelling to each.

The contribution is not always given to both sides in the name of the same giver for fear that it will be discovered and thus one contribution will stultify the effect of the other in the minds of the recipients.

The argument in favor of the Government paying the campaign expenses is overwhelming. Public office is not, or ought not to be, a place for exploiting private advantage. It is a place for performing public duty. It is true to say that the office ought to seek the man, not the man the office.

The Hearst publications have for years advocated the payment by the Government of all legitimate campaign expenses and the prohibition of all other expenses.

Senator Harding, Republican candidate for President, proposes to limit the campaign contributions to $1,000 and most praiseworthy undertakes to begin with his own campaign. This is excellent. But there are so many ways of avoiding such a limitation—and if it were not avoided there might not be money enough contributed to make an adequate presentation of the issues—that we ought to go further and let the Government pay all the legitimate expenses, however much they may be.

More Truth Than Poetry

The Great Desire

By S. E. KISER

IT'S money, money, money, everywhere and all the time;

It's the cause of splendid effort, and it leads the fool to crime,

You may like the work you're doing and your effort may be good,

But you'll leave it in a minute for more money, if you could.

IT'S money in the morning, and it's money all the day

That the rich and poor are after, each in his peculiar way;

We may hear the poet saying that his only wish is fame,

But he's always mighty eager to get money, just the same.

IT'S money in the country, and it's money in the town;

It's money for the monarch and it's money for the clown;

Money keeps the orchards blooming in the Springtime, on the hills;

It's for money that the doctors try to cure us of our ills.

THE gambler says he gambles just because he likes the game,

But his gaze is always fastened on the money, just the same;

The statesman still assure us their ambitions are sublime;

But merely mention money, and they'll listen every time.

IT'S money that brings envy and it's money that cures hate;

Money wins the mighty battle, and upsels the girl may claim that only Love has set her breast aflame,

But the chances are that money figures in it, just the same.

Women Gaining in Asia

By Chandra Sem
PROHIBITION STAFF OFFICER
AND AUTHOR

PARIS, July 18.—Asia, the mother of all civilization, may be the mother of liberty in the future. The East is awakening, and the suffrage movement is only one phase of the wave of freedom which is sweeping over the Continent, and which will probably wash over other continents before very long.

Social liberty and political liberty go hand in hand. And as a nation's advance may be measured by the standard of its women, I foresee the greatest future for Asia.

Thousands of years ago, when India was the cradle of civilization, men and women had equal rights, equal authority. As woman's place was gradually diminished the prestige of our great country dwindled. Now the movement for woman's emancipation is growing stronger and stronger. Eventually it will do away with old prejudices. When women come into their own in the Orient, India will rise to her former heights.

Women all over the world have the same mission and the same interest. They give life, and they have, therefore, the right to preserve life. Peace is the goal which all women must work for.

Your Wife's Relatives
How much is a man bound to do for his wife's relatives? That's the question. If your wife wants you to set her cousin up in business—if she asks you to slip her parents a nice, pleasant annuity—would you be a brute to refuse her?

Now, in the current Constantinian, our writer friend, Montague Glass, offers a delicate solution to the "wife's relatives" problem. He does it in a short story—one of the kind he knows how to write and, tell—amusing, snappy, and, in this case, we will say, instructive.

MEET ANY TEST IN LIFE

By Beatrice Fairfax

SOME time ago all of us were startled to read of the man who, finding protective arms about his wife, who stood caught in the railroad ties, stood facing death in the form of an oncoming locomotive.

"Would I be brave enough for that?" we say—"brave enough to face annihilation with someone I love?"

But there is one braver thing. To face the army of farewell, to endure the awful knowledge that parting has come, to bear the hideous crushing of our life in being desert to all the world—to bear it and not share it for the sake of the "stern-faced daughter of the voice of God—duty." That is the supreme thing. That is the thing that requires the greatest courage of which the human heart is capable.

For every human decision has its "other side." The man who loved his wife enough to die with her had three children. And his duty was to love them enough to live for them.

Everyday life is full of moments of strain. We keep coming to crossroads and having to decide down which way we will go. When there's plenty of time to think things over, to weigh the pros and cons, there isn't much excuse for deciding stupidly. Some unconscious element of chance and change may render a well-thought-out decision null and void. But other things being equal, when there's time to decide the well-balanced brain makes the wise choice.

The best preparation for a crisis is to live every moment of every day as well as we know how. When the little decisions have to be made, we must make them easily and wisely. Mentally and not emotionally. Honestly and not dramatically. Then when a crisis comes automatically the brain trained to weighing and measuring and basing decision on actual values is pretty likely to formulate its decisions like it has for adjustment.

Prepare yourself to live. Train yourself so that no emergency can catch you unready. Learn to be fit with yourself, with everyone with whom you deal, with life itself. Wrestle with every problem that comes along and think it out to a finish. Don't make half decisions and leave the rest to chance. But prepare for the challenge of the moment by making all of life a preparation for it.

When Secretary Coby dines as the guest of "Ambassador" Balmores, we trust that he eats sparingly, for Uncle Sam has to pay the bill.

No mandate for Armenia; but one for America by March 4 next, so say we all.

Now that the campaign against profiteering has begun to hit the big money, the profiteers and consumers are becoming hostile. But a few jail sentences would help.

AN OLD QUEST

By Garrett P. Serviss

"People often say: 'That is just as impossible as squaring the circle.' I wonder like to know what is meant by 'squaring the circle.'"
—C. R. HOOKER.

THE famous problem is to describe, make or find, a square whose area equals the area of a given circle. A perfect solution of this problem is humanly impossible, but an approximate solution, which can be carried to any desired degree short of absolute completeness, has long been known to mathematicians.

I will try to explain to you why the problem is essentially insoluble and yet can easily be solved for all practical purposes.

The area of any surface is found by multiplying together its length and its width. If the outline of the surface is made up of straight lines, even though the figure may have an irregular shape, it is easy to divide it into component figures, the area of each of which can be calculated separately, and their sum will be the area of the whole figure, or surface.

But if the figure has a curved outline (in this case a circle), the problem is not so simple. If you multiply together two diameters of the circle, taken at right angles to one another (in other words, square the diameter, since all the diameters are equal), you will get too large a result, and if you obtain the area of the largest square you can inscribe in the circle the result is too small. Evidently we must go at it some other way.

First Step Not Easy

Such a way was indicated by the great Syracusean geometer Archimedes in the third century before Christ. He found that the area of a circle was equal to the area of a triangle whose base has the same length as the circumference of the circle, while its altitude equals the radius of the circle. This being known, it is clear that the first step toward squaring the circle must be to find the length of its circumference.

You may just roll the circle on a plane surface and see how far one turn will extend in a straight line. But such a process is too rude for mathematical work. With the mathematician seeks the ratio of the circumference to the diameter of the circle. To see how this ratio may be approximately obtained, consider that the curved periphery of a circle may be conceived as made up of an infinite number of infinitely short straight lines, so drawn that each is at the same distance from a central point.

Having obtained a value for this ratio the mathematician multiplies the diameter by it, and thus gets the length of the circumference of the circle. Once knowing that, he can find the area either by the method of Archimedes, or by simply multiplying the square of the radius (half the diameter) by the same ratio.

An Old, Hard Problem

This ratio of circumference to diameter is one of the most useful factors in mathematics. It is called "Pi," and in all mathematical books is symbolized by the Greek letter whose name is represented in English by the word pi, pronounced with the "t" long. But because the diameter and circumference of a circle are incommensurable, i.e., a whole number and a fractional part cannot be expressed by a number which is contained in both an exact number of times, the numerical value of Pi is a mixed number, i.e., a whole number and a fractional part. The value of Pi is approximately 3.14159.

It is customary to express the approximate value of Pi decimally, carrying out the decimal as far as may be desired for extreme accuracy. Thus, for ordinary use Pi may be taken as 3.1416. The least considerable accuracy is required 3.14 will usually suffice. But the decimal part has been carried out to over 700 digits. This calculation is laborious, as it has to be done by means of a special calculation series. For rough purposes the circumference is often found by multiplying the diameter by 3.14.
